Engage with medical researchers

Join the Consumer Buddy Program

What is a consumer?

Consumers are members of the community who have experienced an illness, cared for someone with an illness, or have a passion to help medical researchers.

You can help

By volunteering for our Consumer Buddy Program, you can work directly with a researcher in the areas of cancer, infectious disease and immune disorders, and can assist them communicate their science in plain language to the community.

As a consumer at the Walter and Eliza Hall Institute you can:

- work with a research scientist by contributing your life experiences
- provide insight into how their research can make a difference in the community
- become part of the Institute community with invitations to events and seminars.

Your commitment as a consumer:

- be available to meet with your researcher four times a year for project updates
- undertake training to assist you in your consumer experience.
